Section II. Eligibility of the Works Submitted

(i) As to content, the works to be submitted must tell stories related to the world of work and workers. Within this frame, the festival seeks to disseminate inspiring stories that, with an authorial, lucid and critical view, offer the audience a programmatic proposal that invites to reflect on how to ensure a fair transition to achieve the sustainable development goals, (Global Goals), and thus a world with greater social, economic and environmental justice.

We find ourselves immersed in a labor reality that is impacted by issues closely related to the 2030 Agenda, which provides a transformative vision for sustainable development centered on people and the planet, based on human rights and the dignity of people. The 17 Goals that constitute this agenda are universal, transformative and civilizing, as they envision "a world of universal respect for equality and non-discrimination". As workers, we consider ourselves agents of change and a powerful force, whose struggle must be focused on setting the agenda for the world's political leaders, from all spheres and fronts, to achieve measures aimed at fulfilling these objectives. As an International Film Festival we are convinced that the audiovisual industry is a highly effective tool that allows us to generate positive impact, to focus on underrepresented realities, and also to promote the necessary changes to achieve the evolution that is needed.

We are looking for films in a variety of formats, compatible with the six categories listed above, that shed light on underrepresented stories about how workers, and the socio-labor world in general, deal with such transcendent topics as: gender equality, caregiving tasks and the elderly; education, that allows us to remain relevant in a constantly changing market; the challenge of facing the future of work, which is being driven by increasingly accelerated technological advances that are changing jobs and tasks; social protection in the face of new forms of labor; climate change and its impact on migration, health, and everyone's security and prosperity; the growing inequality that prevents social mobility and jeopardizes food security, health and access to basic services for the majority of the world's population; the struggle of the original communities in terms of respect for the environment, which results in the loss of sources of work and food, and ultimately generates migratory movements; and sustainable consumption and production, among other issues that affect us all and that make it imperative to think about a fair transition to a more balanced world that leaves no one behind.
